Duty of Disclosure – Commercial Clients

As Commercial Clients taking out insurance which is business related, you have a duty to make a fair presentation of the risk to the Insurer. An example of this type of business would be Employer's Liability Insurance. The law in relation to these contracts is the Insurance Act 2015 which came into effect on the 12th August 2016.

This means that you must answer the Insurer's questions, and any we ask on their behalf, honestly, carefully, fully and accurately. In addition you should disclose any other material circumstances not covered by the Insurer's questions. Material circumstances would best be described as those which would influence the judgement of the Insurer in deciding whether to accept the risk and if so on what terms.

A fair presentation includes every material circumstance which you know or ought to know. Or, failing this, providing sufficient information to put the insurer on notice that they need to make further enquiries for the purpose of revealing material circumstances. In identifying the material circumstances which you need to disclose, you are expected to make a reasonable search of the information available within your business. This includes information known to your senior management team and any others involved in buying the insurance.

The information you provide is expected to be reasonably clear and accessible to the Insurer.

In the event that you do not make a fair presentation of the risk, the insurer has various options under the new Act. In the event of deliberate or reckless avoidance of information, the insurer can refuse all claims and keep any premiums paid.

In the event that there has been no deliberate or reckless avoidance of information, the insurer can apply a proportionate remedy. An example of this would be that the insurer can proportionally reduce the amount it pays out on a claim.
